

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Department Overview

International affairs is an interdisciplinary major that stresses the importance of a broad-based international education. The major examines the relations between and among nation-states, regions, and other international actors as influenced by culture, history, politics, business, economics, and the environment. Students majoring in international affairs must also successfully complete another approved minor, major (strongly recommended), or regional concentration to provide depth of knowledge in a discipline or geographic region of the world. In consultation with the IA director, students propose a coherent course of study, which provides both breadth through coursework on international issues from different disciplines and depth through coursework in a region or a specific disciplinary or interdisciplinary area of study. The individual student is free to select any specific minor, major, or regional concentration that best fits the student's personal interests and educational objectives, but must present a coherent proposal of courses and clearly argued rationale for the minor, major, or regional concentration for approval by the IA director and, if necessary, the IA steering committee. The major culminates with an approved capstone experience that allows the student to synthesize the course of study and serves as the basis for further work in the IA senior seminar.

Skidmore's International Affairs Program draws on the expertise of faculty from a broad array of academic disciplines. International affairs majors are also encouraged to study abroad in order to learn about the world beyond the borders of the United States, recognize their own cultural biases, and develop skills to communicate with people from other cultures. Studying abroad enables students to gain foreign language proficiency and first-hand experience of the ways different political, economic, and social systems operate. The opportunity to live in another country for an extended period of time allows students to develop a deeper appreciation for cultural diversity and an understanding of the physical environment in a different region of the world. In addition to being anchored in the richness and variety of its course offerings, faculty scholarship, and study abroad opportunities, the International Affairs Program also stresses other related and reinforcing components:

- colloquia
- faculty/student collaborative projects
- guest lectures
- study in Washington, D.C.
- internships
- cocurricular activities including the student International Affairs Club and the United Nations and European Union simulations of international negotiations

Regional Concentration

A Regional Concentration is intended to offer students the opportunity to supplement their IA major with in-depth knowledge in a designated geographic area of the world. The requirements for a Regional Concentration consist of a program approved by the Director, IA Program, including at least six courses totaling a minimum of 18 credit hours in a specific geographic region of the world that is not separately offered through other Skidmore programs, such as the Asian Studies (AS) or Latin American Studies (LAS) Programs. Examples would be a Regional Concentration in Africa, the Middle East, or Europe. The six courses should all be focused on the specified region, include an approved "Core/Foundation Course" in the region, and include at least one 300-level course. Preferably, the language in the IA major would be a language used in the Regional Concentration. No more than two courses may overlap between the IA major and the Regional Concentration.

Writing Requirement in the Major

The development of excellent written communication skills is an essential component of the IA curriculum and the learning process in general. IA students must demonstrate their ability to think critically and write clearly. Students will fulfill the Skidmore writing requirement in the IA major through successful completion of:

Code	Title	Hours

300-Level International Affairs Course

Select one 300-level international affairs course from any discipline 3-4

Additional Requirements

The six international affairs courses taken must include one course from at least three different disciplines, not including the IA core course and the foreign language course.

Total Hours 19-24

Note: No more than two courses may overlap between the IA minor and the major.

Honors

To receive honors in International Affairs, students must

- earn a GPA of 3.50 in all IA courses taken;
- complete the IA Capstone Experience with a grade of at least an A-;
- receive a favorable recommendation by the IA Program;
- earn a GPA of 3.0 or higher based on all work taken at Skidmore; and
- be approved by the faculty upon recommendation by CAS.

Course Listing

International Affairs Courses

IA 101 - Introduction to International Affairs

Credits: 4

An introduction to the field of international affairs. The course explores the relationships among the disciplines within international affairs.

Examines key concepts that describe and explain international relationships and issues, explores the diversity of perceptions of international issues across national and cultural boundaries, and engages students in in-class global problem-solving exercises.

Note(s): Fulfills Cultural Diversity requirement; fulfills Global Cultural Perspectives requirement.

IA 201 - Research Methods

Credits: 3-4

Fundamental methodological concepts and practices in International Affairs. Students will analyze, design, and conduct interdisciplinary research on international affairs. Students will learn to be better "consumers" of scholarly research and skilled "producers" of knowledge based on original research.

Prerequisites: IA 101.

Note(s): Primarily designed for sophomores and juniors majoring in International Affairs.

IA 215 - Excavating Culture

Credits: 4

This course introduces students to the fundamental concepts of anthropology through a deep dive into ethnographic writing on different regions of the world. Selected countries (including the U.S.) are discussed with respect to how culture influences their political, geographic, and economic characteristics. Several concepts and themes are explored, among them race and identity construction, violence and resistance, colonialism and inequality, gender and sexuality, as well as global interconnectedness. This course will also emphasize contemporary events as they relate to the fundamental themes of the course. Ultimately, students will leave this class with a nuanced understanding of how power, justice, and identity inform socio-political structures both within the United States and throughout our world.

Prerequisites: SSP 100.Note(s): Fulfills Cultural Diversity and Social Sciences requirements; fulfills Bridge Experience and Global Cultural Perspective requirements.IA 253 - Foundational Topics in International Affairs: The Political World

Typically organized courses focused on selected problems, areas, and issues of special interest in international affairs at the intermediate level. Topics vary depending upon specialization and research interests of visiting and/or Skidmore faculty.

IA 375 - Senior Seminar in IA

Credits: 1

A seminar required of all international affairs majors in the spring term, when they make final oral and written presentations of their senior capstone project to the International Affairs Committee. This course is designed to enhance students' research, written, and oral communication skills relating to international affairs, and to strengthen their awareness of international issues and professional opportunities. The course includes presentations and discussions by students and guest lecturers, instruction on library research, writing, and oral presentation skills. Students present their capstone project ideas at the preliminary meeting and are evaluated on their research process, participation, and oral presentation. The course culminates in the presentation of senior capstone projects to international affairs faculty, students, and the community.

Note(s): Letter grade only.IA 376 - Senior Seminar in IA

Credits: 4

A research-oriented senior seminar required of all International Affairs (IA) majors that also functions as the Senior Experience Coda in IA. Students will design and execute original and in-depth independent capstone research papers, which they will also present publicly at the end of the semester to the faculty, students, and the Skidmore community. Class work (including presentations, guest lectures and discussions) will serve to discuss and critically reflect upon theories, methodologies, and historical and contemporary events and phenomena from an interdisciplinary perspective, in order to guide students in their independent research.

Prerequisites: IA 101, IA 201 C-D, and IA 351 C-D.Note(s): Offered only in the spring term. Fulfills Senior Experience Coda requirement.IA 399 - Professional Internship In International Affairs

Credits: 1-4

Internship or professional experience at an advanced level for students with substantial academic experience in the major field. With faculty sponsorship and Program approval, students select an internship and produce a research paper or other appropriate work related to the area of the internship on a topic approved by the faculty sponsor and the on-site supervisor.

Note(s): IA 399 cannot be counted as one of the 300-level courses required of the International Affairs major/minor. Must be taken S/U. Not for liberal arts credit.Foundation Courses*For Students Who Entered Skidmore Prior to Fall 2016
